Ryan T. Christian @ POVEVOLVING GALLERY March 13th - April 8th, 2010

In the project room of the gallery we present the drawings of Ryan T. Christian.

Ryan's drawings are super dense & highly patterned.... it often feels like something bad or dark or creepy is going on... but then there's fragmented pieces of playful characters that threaten to come out of the darkness and some how keep them lighthearted... a recent clipping from his FecalFace.com interview gives an idea of his process:

"I use graphite mainly, but I'm starting to invite metallic spray paints and gouache to the party. Cotton balls and q tips, tape, swearing. I stare at works way too long, to the point where it has been some time since I have thought about what I am looking at. I pretty much just begin at some point on the surface and start responding to the marks over and over, hoping I'll slip into the "zone". It is neat though; there are some definite subconscious patterns that are starting to become apparent to me even though it feels random. I'm figuring out ways to fight that or at least change it. I'm prone to get mad at a drawing and completely black it out and start over right on top of it."

This is a show to make it out to... it also happens to open on the Quarterly 'Chinatown Art Night' ... so its sure to be a great time.
